

Memling, Riemenschneider and Altdorfer

Hans Memling (c.1430–94) was a German-born painter who became one of the leading artists in Bruges, known for his restrained and pious paintings. He spent time in Rogier van der Weyden's workshop and, in 1464, was made a citizen of Bruges. Retaining his early style, he painted numerous portraits, private devotional works and large religious paintings. Tilman Riemenschneider (c.1460–1531) was a German sculptor and woodcarver, active in Würzburg from 1483. Prolific and versatile, he was exceedingly skilled in working in sandstone, alabaster, marble and limewood. After he became a master sculptor in 1485, his workshop grew into one of the busiest in Germany.

German painter, engraver and architect, Albrecht Altdorfer (c.1480–1538) worked in Regensburg, Bavaria. Along with Lucas Cranach the Elder and Wolf Huber (c.1485–1553), he is considered a leader of the 'Danube School', a group who were among the first to paint pure landscapes and highly expressive figures, making a decisive break with the high finish of Northern Renaissance art.
