

Feminist art

In the late 1960s, Feminist art emerged in the USA and Britain as part of the general feminist movement. It was further fuelled in 1971, when art historian Linda Nochlin (b.1931) published her essay 'Why Have There Been No Great Women Artists?' Investigating the factors that had prevented women artists from achieving equal status to their male counterparts, Nochlin inspired many more females who aimed to counter centuries of male-dominated art.

That same year, Judy Chicago (b.1939) and Miriam Schapiro (b.1923) set up the Feminist Art programme at the California Institute of the Arts, while in England, art critics Rozsika Parker (1945–2010) and Griselda Pollock (b.1949) founded the Women's Art History Collective in 1973. With no unifying style, Feminist artists combined aspects from various art movements and media, such as performance and video. Expressing messages about women's unique experience, they include Chicago, Schapiro, Barbara Kruger (b.1945), Louise Bourgeois (1911–2010), Cindy Sherman (b.1954), Tracey Emin (b.1963) and the Guerrilla Girls.

Tracey Emin, My Bed, 1998